Dublin June 25. 1853.

My dear Mr Macy – I received your letter & have sent it on to Eliza Wigham & Mary A. Estlin, and I quite agree with you that the case completely in hand it to endeavour the better. I enclose letter for Wm Chapman, S. S. Foster & Parker Pillsbury, which you will oblige me by forwarding. I had the Advocates forwarded according to your request, & the names entered in my list. Your kind postcard came to hand long since & I thought I acknowledged the receipt long ago – when forwarding a letter to the Standard, but I may have mistaken the note for the deed.

How the change will take for the cause in these parts I cannot in the least predict. Mr Edmondston, our chief help, talks despondingly – but towards the critical time, the clouds often clear up. Read what is said about a National Protest in the next Advocate, & give me your views. If they differ from mine in that for June I shall not be sorry. How beautiful was the testimony to Ellen Jay Long (which I could not find in the forthcoming numbers.) from Garrison & Phillips. I have seldom read such an encomium – nor one I should so much like to have spoken of me on / Lord.

You see the Right of trial & the Right of search are both abandoned in a legal opinion of the Crown Lawyers - so that the American pirates Flavers have just flying, a man has only to hoist up the Stars & Stripes & he may do as he pleases. Read what the Saturday says in the last Advocate. It is very good.
I am confident in the good faith of our government. I have some objections to Yours.
The character of the American Government is rapidly making Republicanism stink in the nostrils of the English people. As far as I know nobody pleads for Republicanism unless he is also ready to cover up or apologise for Slavery. The Evening Journal has really been started in London. I am pulling off the copy to send to you by this post. The rest will not be the least work.
Will you please forward the letter for me & add a line to P. Pillsbury & the effect that letter of his for the Advocate was was omitted but only one can, when it came to hand too late. I have always resisted to set contributions but of course must use my judgment as to the extent pleases - You know he is touchy.
I ought to have told you that we are very glad to have Good Counterfeit presentments & have Harriet Jacobs who is now here. Says the pole pass is particular is very like. Mr Barclay sent me a proof photograph on a thick piece - not exactly a card but to the Editor of the Advocate. I suppose such copies are to be had very cheaply. I intend to see Mr Webster in Church when the Master in the 17th & 18th probably wish to see by her

Yours ever truly
